

Dear Company Manager,

Hello! We are students of Frank H. Hammond Elementary School. The children who wrote this letter are in Mr. Smith's after-school Media Fair class. Media Fair is where you learn how to make websites, use digital cameras, and a lot more fun stuff.

Our website is about advertising mistakes, such as the L in Staples, capitalized letters where they shouldn't be, and other things that could confuse kindergarten students. They are just learning how to write and use grammar rules.

Marketing for Dummies, our website, is basically saying that these purposely made mistakes may be cute, but the mistakes make the companies look bad sometimes.

After going around our state, finding mistakes in restaurants, car shops, and grocery stores, we have created our website not just to entertain, but to teach how to spot careless mistakes.

We are using your product or store name for our Internet site. If you have a problem with that, please contact us at our school's address or fax us. We will be happy to take of your product or name out of our site. We would be very happy if you switched your product or store name.

Sincerely,
Tuesday Media Fair
