

The HOOLIGAN gun series for INTO THE SHADOWS RPG

Hooligan Mark 1

Created exclusively for a vigilante Mariachi by a small firearms shop in northern Mexico. The short barrel and dual revolving cylinders are hidden behind a black codpiece. The assembly is spring-activated and when initiated by a specific motion of the wearer's hips the codpiece opens and the weapon fires until all of its rounds are exhausted (use burst firing rules). The assembly is difficult to aim, which accounts for the short ranges. It is not intended as a common use weapon, but makes an ideal ace-in-the-hole when the wearer appears to be unarmed.

Hooligan Mark 2

This version of the crotch-gun is an improved design with a longer barrel. It was built by the biker owner of the firearms shop that produced the original version. The longer barrel is possible because the barrel is hinged and raises when the codpiece is opened, the revolving cylinders swing down into place. As with the Mark 1 the assembly is spring-activated and when initiated by a specific motion of the wearer's hips the codpiece opens and the weapon fires until all of its rounds are exhausted (use burst firing rules). A similar motion can be used to open the codpiece and erect the weapon (bad pun) without automatically initiating firing. The assembly is difficult to aim, which accounts for the short ranges.

Hooligan Mark 3

The Hooligan Brassiere-Gun was developed separately from the crotch-gun by an unknown agency for use by female assassins. The idea has been mimicked on a number of occasions by various private parties. While limited in ammunition and difficult to aim, the surprise value alone is often worth the effort. The gun is actually two separate one-shot guns in a special reinforced and padded brassiere to avoid bruising or burning the wearer, and to allow for limited aiming. The pressure-activated trigger can be clipped to the brassiere or suspended on a wire to the wearer's pockets or hands. The design has been faithfully reproduced by the manufacturers of the Crotch-Gun for their discerning customers.
